

Youssef Sedrak

Red Bull Wingfinder Report

youssef.sedrak@outlook.com, completed January 28, 2026

What makes you unique, Youssef?

Every one of us is unique with different passions, strengths and goals. Knowing your strengths and how to best leverage them, along with what to watch out for, enables you to develop, grow and succeed.

Red Bull Wingfinder is a science-based personality assessment that helps you understand your strengths in the areas most influential for high performance at work.

Red Bull Wingfinder has 24 individual strengths grouped into four key areas. 30 years of psychological research carried out across thousands of scientific studies, have shown these four factors to be most influential for high performance at work.

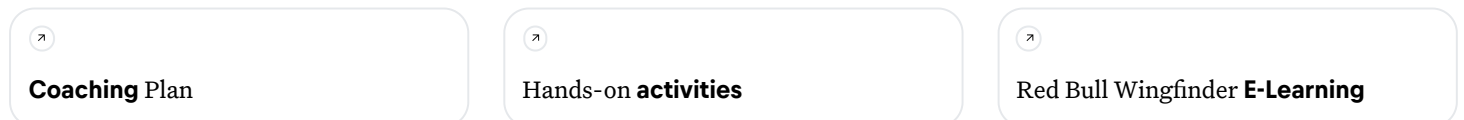

Understand your strengths

Strengths influence the ways you're most likely to think and behave. They're your strongest personality preferences and what you rely on to succeed at work.

Using your Red Bull Wingfinder report, explore your strengths to better understand 'what makes you, you'.

Develop your strengths

High performance comes when you put in deliberate effort and practice to build on your strengths. Use these personalized resources to start turning your strengths into superpowers.

Explore more online

Scan the QR code to access the resources to develop your strengths.

”

Based on this robust model of talent and a state-of-the-art scientific methodology, Wingfinder represents an unprecedented attempt to help millions of people identify and develop their career potential.

Dr. Tomas Chamorro-Premuzic, Chief Talent Scientist at Manpower Group and Professor of Business Psychology at University College London and Columbia University

Connections

Your CONNECTIONS measures how well you manage relationships and how well you work independently.

You're comfortable meeting new people and networking, and you're able to read and influence others if required. But you're equally happy working on your own and enjoy projects that let you be autonomous.

You are slightly more Direct than Diplomatic

You're concerned with other people's needs and try to deal with conflict fairly. You hear what other people have to say and are honest in your own opinions.

On a good day you give clear and honest feedback

On a bad day you can find fault too easily

You succeed through

- ✓ being able to see two viewpoints
- ✓ getting your point across clearly
- ✓ listening to others

You are slightly more Supportive than Autonomous

Although you have your own views, you also value the people around you. That's why you're good at listening to the opinions of others.

On a good day you are naturally supportive of colleagues

On a bad day you can be too influenced by others' needs

You succeed through

- ✓ being independent yet needed within a team
- ✓ working in the group's interests
- ✓ hearing outside opinions

You are slightly more Emotive than Balanced

You're good at dealing with stress. That doesn't mean you don't worry about things that matter, but you stay focused and rational.

On a good day You are sensitive and care about things that matter to you

On a bad day you can be too passionate about your work

You succeed through

- ✓ being rational about the challenges you face
- ✓ staying in control
- ✓ not being too laid back

You are Reserved

★ Top strength

While you're happy to network and make new contacts when necessary, you prefer to work with people you know. You're also very comfortable working alone.

On a good day you avoid social distractions

On a bad day you feel uncomfortable in large team settings

You succeed through

- ✓ pragmatically investing in new connections
- ✓ staying focused on your work
- ✓ allowing others to be heard

Creativity

Your CREATIVITY measures how original and innovative your thinking is, or how logical and analytical it is.

You're good at coming up with new ideas but also recognise the importance of combining this with tried and tested approaches. You enjoy a balance between the new and the old, and appreciate originality when it's not too eccentric.

You are slightly more Focused than Adaptable

You have a pragmatic approach to problem-solving, and you're willing to embrace different ideas and approaches without losing sight of the task in hand.

On a good day you work best when delivering to a deadline

On a bad day you can get caught up in the detail

You succeed through

- ✓ your flexible thinking
- ✓ your structured approach
- ✓ your ability to focus

You are Pragmatic

★ Top strength

You generally prefer practical, tried-and-tested solutions to problems, but you're still open to the prospect of innovation.

On a good day you thrive in familiar settings

On a bad day you avoid thinking outside the box

You succeed through

- ✓ your focus on practicality
- ✓ your results-based approach
- ✓ not being too stuck in your ways

You are Open to Experience

★ Top strength

You enjoy daydreaming and think originally. Open-minded and comfortable with change, you adapt well to new situations.

On a good day you leap enthusiastically into the unknown

On a bad day you avoid repetitive tasks

You succeed through

- ✓ your intuition
- ✓ your flexibility
- ✓ your keen sense of aesthetics

Drive

Your DRIVE measures your level of ambition.

You're self-confident and always aim to do your very best work, but you don't always see your colleagues as rivals. So while you enjoy being praised for your achievements, you're equally happy to see others recognised for theirs.

You are slightly more Modest than Confident

You're confident in yourself and your abilities but you realise that you're also human. You know what you're capable of and you're also realistic about your limitations.

On a good day you build confidence by having competence

On a bad day you could suffer from a lack of self-promotion

You succeed through

- ✓ knowing when to step forward and when to let others take the lead
- ✓ balancing your confidence with your cautiousness
- ✓ understanding what you're good at and focusing on those areas

You are slightly more Patient than an Achiever

You care about the work you do and work hard on projects you believe in. But you keep things in balance and don't let work take over your life.

On a good day you are satisfied with what you have

On a bad day you are not always proactive enough

You succeed through

- ✓ keeping your life and work in balance
- ✓ managing your workload
- ✓ being energetic and enthusiastic at work

You are slightly more Relaxed than Disciplined

You care about consistency and details, but you don't lose sight of the bigger picture.

On a good day you are good at putting things in perspective

On a bad day you may leave tasks unfinished

You succeed through

- ✓ being dependable and consistent
- ✓ your ability to let go
- ✓ careful planning

You are Dutiful

You feel a deep sense of loyalty and you deliver on the tasks that you are entrusted with. You tend to be prompt to respond to requests, and you contribute positively to group efforts.

On a good day you are amenable and rule following

On a bad day you may struggle to say no or challenge authority

You succeed through

- ✓ your trustworthiness
- ✓ your reliability
- ✓ your team orientation

Thinking

Your THINKING measures the abilities you draw upon when solving problems and ranges from Intuitive to Agile.

As an agile thinker you're a fast learner, and are highly developed at working out the components of complex tasks, opinions and ideas which assists you in finding solutions. It's in your nature to think logically and you have a talent for seeing the details and patterns in problems.

You are highly Agile

★ Top strength

You learn fast and enjoy solving complex problems through your logical, analytical way of working.

Intuitive

Agile

On a good day you are a natural problem-solver

On a bad day you may be constrained by a desire for structure

You succeed through

- ✓ using reason to solve problems
- ✓ focusing on objectivity
- ✓ learning constantly

Your personal Coaching Plan

Your personal coaching plan focuses on your top 4 strengths. These top 4 strengths represent your strongest personality preferences and the areas that you are most likely to develop.

Your Top Strengths

You are Reserved

You are Pragmatic

You are
Open to Experience

You are
Agile

What are strengths?

Strengths are the ways you are most likely to behave – your strongest personality preferences. They are aspects of your personality that you use to succeed at work and as you rely on them you are more likely to start and continue developing them. High performance comes from shaping and expanding your strengths through concentrated effort and practice.

Your Strengths, Your Story

We all have our own unique strengths. Wingfinder focuses on the key factors for career success which have been identified by psychologists across thousands of scientific studies. What YOU DO to develop your strengths will make the difference.

Beware of the Dark Side

Every aspect of personality has its positives and negatives depending on the situation and being self-aware will help you succeed in your career. As your top 4 strengths are your most preferred way to behave, you may be overusing them, or there may be situations they may not be to your advantage, how they can be managed and developed is key.

You are Reserved

While you're happy to network and make new contacts when necessary, you prefer to work with people you know. You're also very comfortable working alone.

▶▶ Keep doing

You enjoy working on your own and are driven by your own internal standards. This means you're acutely aware of what it is that motivates you about your projects and work. Keep focused on the details — your ability to do so is a valuable asset to others on your team.

■ Stop doing

It's good to be independent, but do not lose track of what others are thinking, or rely too heavily on your own point of view. It's important to stay in the loop and gain the support and ideas of others in your team.

▶ Start doing

Start actively balancing your interactions with time spent working alone. Make sure you reference other people's ideas when you explain your thinking around a problem or solution. This will help colleagues and team members buy in to your work.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1 Find the right balance

Keep a balance between spending time with others and spending time on your own.

2 Be self-aware

Carefully review what other people say about your work and behaviour. Self-awareness is key.

3 Look outwards

Broaden your focus. Make sure you know what's going on around you.

4 Help colleagues when you can

Don't just focus on your own work. Help out colleagues when they seem to be struggling.

You are Pragmatic

You generally prefer practical, tried-and-tested solutions to problems, but you're still open to the prospect of innovation.

▶▶ Keep doing

People rely on you to focus on the practical, 'how do we get this done' side of any task, initiative or goal. Keep sharing this strength with those around you; your practical way of thinking and doing is valued.

■ Stop doing

What's worked in the past might not work in the future. Avoid falling into all-too-comfortable patterns of relying on past logic or solutions.

▶ Start doing

Work with creative thinkers to achieve balance — they may be able to suggest an alternative, more innovative solution. Challenge yourself to see other possibilities and how they could work.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1 Ask yourself 'what if?'

Start more sentences with 'What if?' and 'Imagine if ...!'. This will encourage a positive creative attitude.

2 Try to have fun

Make sure that whatever you're working on, even the seemingly mundane or boring, has an element of fun to it.

3 Look at things differently

When faced with a challenge, try to think of a different way of problem-solving rather than just doing what has worked for you in the past.

4 Change your routine

Do something you do every day in a different way, like waking up an hour earlier or taking a different route to work.

You are Open to Experience

You enjoy daydreaming and think originally. Open-minded and comfortable with change, you adapt well to new situations.

» Keep doing

Keep sharing your imaginative perspective with others. Bring them along for the ride and help them see the possibilities in each situation.

■ Stop doing

Sometimes, challenging others can land you in hot water. Know when and how to express your progressive ideas – and also when it might be best not to.

► Start doing

Start applying more focus and discipline to your pursuits, to help bring your creative ideas to life more often.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1 Look outside your work for inspiration

Use your interests outside of work to help fuel your creativity and productivity at work.

2 Share ideas with others

Go to lunch with other creative thinkers and share your ideas in an informal atmosphere.

3 Use your self-awareness

Use your awareness of your feelings to your benefit — making better decisions, for example.

4 Respect other viewpoints

You can be quite open in your views, but be careful about when and how you present them if you are challenging the status quo at work.

You are Agile

You learn fast and enjoy solving complex problems through your logical, analytical way of working.

Keep doing

You have a highly developed ability to analyse problems, identifying patterns and relationships that make up the problem, and finding logical solutions. Because of this, you're good at finding solutions, even in situations where you don't have previous knowledge or experience.

Stop doing

Try not to be too closed off to ideas that haven't been rigorously tested or researched. Take a chance on the unpredictable and choose the right situations to trust your intuition. Notice when you're racing far ahead of people with your thinking. Not everyone is as fast as you, so take the time to bring them on board.

Start doing

Team up with people who work in a more intuitive way. Combining your analytical brain with their less-structured approach could produce some exciting results.

Here are four ways to help you build on this strength

1 Avoid assumptions

When you're considering many different solutions to a problem, the one that asks you to make the fewest assumptions is usually the best one.

2 Question things

Always question what you're reading as you read it. This will help you to become more engaged with the text.

3 Examine your ideas rigorously

Make sure you debate your ideas before acting on them, to spot any weaknesses or flaws.

4 Challenge yourself intellectually

Keep your mind agile outside of work by experiencing a wide variety of intellectual challenges.